

Among the marvels and intrigues all around us, it has always been strange to find, in various pockets of new clothes, notes and numbers from an “inspector.” It was like someone staying secretly in touch, assuring my clothes were being watched over. Reassuring. In this poem, I imagined a pair of pants and my protector had turned cruel. I have not found a note since this poem.