

the sedge wren

each midnight, shadow of a wing then a lone, squeaky staccato unflagging and emanating from the edge of the slough some are born with song some must apprentice and hone and then there is the autodidact's wend of a sui generis, wound-up sedge wren